1. Introduction

This statute is ordered with the purpose of defending the New Sarovian Empire's lower ranked citizens by allowing the citizens to own on map locations in New Sarovia, acting as a place of residence, to encourage more on map activity and social behaviour.

2. Agraria Clauses

The Lex Agraria is based on a Roman law proposed in 133 BC during the Tribune of Tiberius Gracchus. The law involved the redistribution of public land, previously owned by the Senatorial class, to the lower classes in Ancient Rome, using money bequeathed to Rome in the will of Attalus III of Pergamum to purchase the land and provide resources with which the Plebeians could start lives farming the land rather than suffering from debt and unemployment in the city.

The New Sarovian Lex Agraria Act divides up all on map property in the Empire and gives it to NCO and officers of the Imperial Army to live and reside in. Meetings between members should be held in their homes, and their homes should be a part of a garrison of forces.
